

WORKSHOP APPRENTICE AT ARCHIVAL STUDIES

Archival Studies is looking for a new joiner or cabinetmaker apprentice to join our international team as part of their NEXT education. The workshop is an integral part of our architecture practice where the workshop team works closely with the architects and designers to develop thoughtful, well-crafted solutions towards a low-carbon future. While we do undertake production, our primary focus is on developing prototypes that resourceful production companies can easily scale up. We work in the intersection of furniture, interior and building scale with an emphasis on digitally fabricated systems designed for disassembly. Our work is carried out with attention to detail while remaining easy to manufacture, akin to the Japanese Traditional House, which combines primitive essence with perfect performance.

We are seeking candidates who possess the following qualifications and skills:

- As an educational part of NEXT education.
- Proactive, organized, and responsible.
- Open-minded, thoughtful, and respectful.
- Ability to contribute creatively within a collaborative team environment.
- Passion for hands-on work, materials, and fabrication processes.
- Strong attention to detail.
- Interest in new materials and low-carbon solutions.

Candidates with the following additional qualifications will be favored:

- Interdisciplinary interest that supports the craft.
- Familiarity with 3D modeling and technical drawings.
- A keen eye for aesthetic detail and innovative design solutions.

What we offer:

- Dynamic work environment within an international team of architects, designers & joiners.
- Focus on community with events, everyday healthy lunch, and educational workshops.
- Variety in projects with diverse collaborators.
- Fully automated CNC and full Festool package.
- Voksen lærlinge løn.

If you are a motivated individual with the described background and aspire to become a next-generation craftsman, bridging historical craft with digital fabrication, we would love to hear from you! To apply, please send your resume, portfolio and cover letter, preferably in English, to job@archivalstudies.net with the subject "Workshop Apprentice".
